1956 Canadian BU Rolls

These sparkling beauties come from original rolls beautifully cared for and each coin is absolutely a gem. Our information shows the value of these as listed in Canadian Coin News in the October 23, 1978 edition to be listed at $2.00 per coin which breaks down to $80.00 per roll. Further checking has indicated that in the same edition of CCN they are being offered for sale by a leading dealer at $70.00 per roll. Well we plan to offer our readers a great opportunity to acquire these pieces at exactly one half of their catalog value at just $40.00 per roll. Better hurry as they are guaranteed to go quickly. This investment ranks high as one of our all time greats!

Order No. 12-001 SPECIAL $40.00 per roll.

1949 Canadian BU Rolls

Here is another item just impossible to believe. We acquired a small number of these original 1949 BU rolls and each coin is a gem. None show any signs of carbon or spotting. We show the trend value listed at 75 cents to $2.25 per coin which indicates that spotted coins are worth 75 cents each and gem BU coins are worth $2.25 each. This arrives to a total roll value of $112.50. We have taken this price and cut it exactly in half. For just $56.25 you can buy this roll while they last. Here is another example of a quality investment.

Order No. 12-002 SPECIAL $56.25 per roll.

Bicentennial Souvenir Card

This is the first time we have been able to offer this card. It was issued as a part of the souvenir program issued in 1976 by INTERPHIL in Philadelphia. Most collectors overlooked the card making it fairly scarce today. White Ace has given it a space in their special Souvenir Card album which is sure to increase demand. Better check your collection to see if you overlooked this one.

1911 Paid Reply Postal Card
Sc. #UY6

We are extremely pleased to offer you this very rare card. This is without a doubt the rarest of the reply cards and is rarely seen, even in auctions. All of our cards are in pristine, unfolded condition. There is slight toning around the edges, but this is due to normal aging rather than neglect. You can't help but be pleased!

SUPER FOREIGN PROOF SET SALE

Strike Saves Readers 10% Off Published Prices

Due to a local strike, which prevented us from offering this selection of World Coins at about the same time it was to appear in major numismatic publications, we are sorry that a majority of the items listed in this section have been sold. This has been indicated by a slash across the item number. As an extra incentive to those receiving this late issue, we offer you the opportunity to take an additional 10% off the prices listed in this Foreign Proof Set Sale. In many cases, stock on hand is limited to one or more of an item, so please list alternate choices whenever possible. Telephone reservations are suggested. Sorry, but no collect calls will be accepted. Telephone (213) 272-0851 or 278-9740.

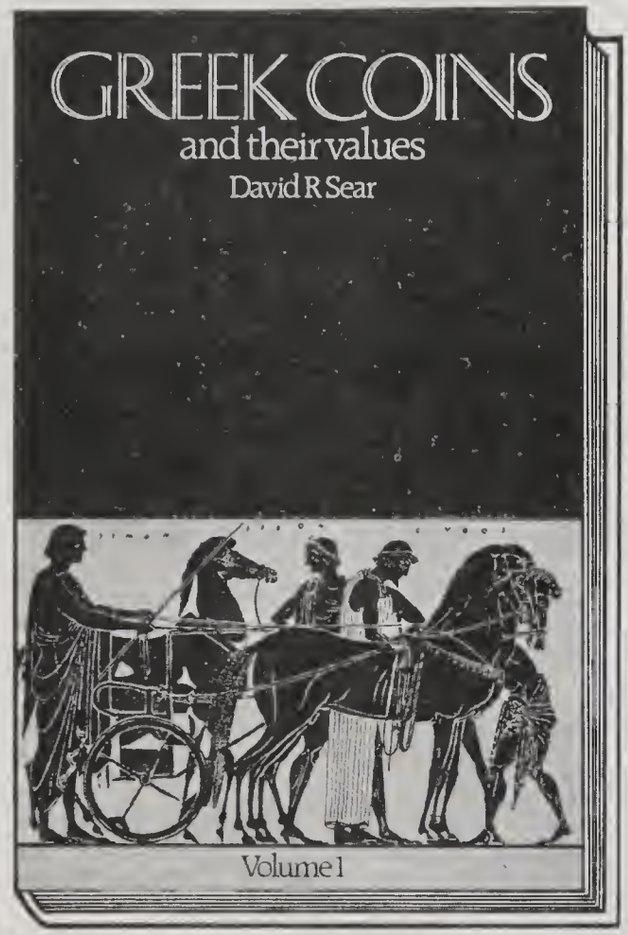
An outstanding new book from Seaby



GREEK COINS
AND THEIR VALUES
I
EUROPE

We have been waiting over four years for an up-to-date catalogue on Greek Coins. David Sear set out to achieve what has not been attempted before: namely, a listing with values of virtually every main type of Hellenic coinage.

The average collector should be able to locate in this catalogue all the types he is likely to encounter, in one denomination or another, and the numerous historical notes provide valuable background information.

The illustrated preface contains sections on collecting Greek coins, a brief account of Greek history and the development of coinage, Greek coin types, weight standards and denominations, the dating of Greek coins, and books of reference and other sources quoted in the catalogue.

Of the 3395 coins listed, 1500 are illustrated from photographs taken by P. Frank Purvey from coins in the British Museum, many of which have never before been photographed for publication.

This first volume covers the Greek coins of Europe arranged in geographical order from Spain in the west, to the Peloponnese and Crete.

A Small Hoard of Roman Coins

M. Aurelius Valerius Maxentius, son of the Emperor Maximianus, revolted against the Emperor Galerius and was proclaimed Emperor towards the end of A.D. 306. Galerius sent Severus against Maxentius, but he was deserted by many of his soldiers and fell into the hands of the usurper and put to death. Galerius' attempt to conquer the city of Rome was no more successful and he beat a hasty retreat to Pannonia. Early in A.D. 312 Constantine marched against Maxentius with an army only a quarter the size of his opponent's. At the famous battle of the Milvian Bridge on October 28, A.D. 312 Maxentius was defeated and killed. During the rule of Maxentius the port city of Ostia contained a mint which struck bronze folles to pay the emperor's troops. We have obtained a small hoard of these coins which show a laureate head of the usurper with the Dioscuri holding their hourses on the reverse. All have the mint mark MOSTP. These interesting coins are offered on a first come - first serve basis at $19.95 each while they last.

GREEK POTTERY FROM SOUTHERN ITALY

Beginning in the early eighth Century B.C., the Greeks, in quest of metals, found their way to Italy. Though they had their own pottery to trade, soon they found native Italian pottery flourishing in various regions.

In the Apulian region of southern Italy, the native painted pottery (spanning from the early seventh to the late third Century B.C.) is usually divided into three groups: Messapian, Peucetian, and Daunian, corresponding to the ancient tribal divisions of Apulia. Each type keeps its own individual style and development, but the pottery of all three originates in the translation of Italian impasto ware into the painted technique of Greece and shows a similar succession of styles. An early monochrome period is followed by a middle bichrome stage. Then monochrome returns in an age of decadence which is survived by only Daunian, where a fourth polychrome period marks a brilliant close.

In the painted decoration of their pottery, the western Greeks adapted Aegean traditions with their own fresh and lively approach, surpassing the imitations of the Corinthian and Attic types which the Italic peoples began to produce for themselves.

At about the time of the foundation of Thurii (430 B.C.), two schools of vase-painting based on contemporary Attic styles grew up in the Taras region of southern Italy (Group A somewhere west of Tarentum, Group B in Tarentum itself), and a third began almost simultaneously in Campania. This last, known as the "Owl-Pillar group" offered an inferior imitation of contemporary Attic vases, and rapidly died out. The former two types, however, had important consequences, for they stimulated a local manufacture by, presumably, immigrant Athenian craftsmen, which blossomed, in the early fourth Century, into the great schools of south Italian vase-painting.

These western Greek artists of south Italian red-figure pottery were more susceptible than their Attic counterparts to the novelties of free painting. Abandoning stylistic restraint, they executed their work utilizing the more baroque effects which achieved popularity at the close of the fifth Century.

The two schools of red-figure, whose products are known as Early South Italian or Early Italiot, are the Lucanian and the Apulian. The Lucanian style, descended from Group A, favored the bell-krater vase-type, which they tended to decorate with two or three-figure groups, often consisting of static young men or of frenzied satyrs and bacchantes. Later the style became florid, and the school seems not to have outlived the fourth Century.

The Apulian school, continuing from Group B, seems to have been more influential. Here, again, the bell-krater was popular, and on these and other large vases the Apulian painters composed statuesque figure-scenes, often in two superposed friezes.

The successors of the Apulian school have been divided into the "Ornate" and the "Plain" styles. The Ornate style, exhibited on such large pots as volute-krater, amphora and hydria, reaches its full bloom after the mid-fourth Century. The Plain style is preferred on bell-krater, column-krater, amphora, and pelike. Its normal repertoire of subject is limited: Dionysiac groups or women at their toilet, and on the backs of kraters, young men in cloaks. Among the women, a young, effeminate Eros is often found. White and yellow paint is used lavishly. In the second half of the fourth Century, there are many small vases with palmettes and female heads. The output is immense. The greater part of all south Italian red-figure pottery is Apulian. The Apulian school lasted into the first years of the third Century.

On some pots, especially of the later fourth Century, subsidiary ornaments or even figures are not reserved, but painted in color on the dark varnish background. Attic vases provide models at first, though later, the influence of the Italian red-figure style is apparent. The Campanian vases follow their models most faithfully. The Etruscan ones are more barbarous, and the Apulian pieces are more independent, revealing the influence of the native ceramic in shapes and in a fondness for decorative motives and floral patterns which has suggested comparison of the class with the later Gnathian ware.

The majority of the known examples of Gnathian ware are derived from Apulia. The vases of this class are glazed throughout and painted in color on the glaze with designs mainly white, together with red and differnet shades of yellow. A characteristic feature is an irregular hand-tooled fluting of the body of the vase, often interrupted by a central band of painted ornament. This group marks the close of Greek vase painting, in the second half of the third Century B.C.

Another class of Apulian pottery is called Canosa Ware. The most important shape of this group is derived from the Daunian askos, to which is added figurines and plastic ornaments. The clay is fairly fine and light brown. The connection with red-figure and some vague contexts suggests that this group belongs to the later fourth and to the third Centuries B.C.

A native town in Sicily, Centuripe, was also greatly influenced by Greek culture. Their polychrome pottery of fantastic shapes seems to have served a purely decorative function in a funerary setting. The chief shapes were bowls and kraters on high feet, often worked in separate pieces, and having domed covers terminating in large finials. The relief ornaments consist of scenes with human figures, executed in tempera, and it is these which give importance to this ware, for they are precious relics of Hellenistic painting, of which comparatively few specimens survive.

A HOLY ROMAN EMPIRE COIN HOARD

Henry III, The Black, Holy Roman Emperor, 1039-1056. The only son of Conrad II, he married Kunigunde, daughter of Canute, King of Denmark and England. During his reign he suppressed revolts, both in the east and west and was probably the main force that held together the loose confederation of nobles and churchmen that constituted the Holy Roman Empire. On his death in 1056 he left the empire to his son, Henry IV.

Henry IV, 1056-1106 is best remembered by the legend of his submission to Pope Gregory VII which depicts the excommunicated king as standing in the courtyard of the Castle of Canossa for three days, in the snow, clad as a penitant and entreating to be admitted to the pope's presence. On January 28, 1077 he made his submission to the pope and was absolved. This event marked the highest point of papal authority over the secular rulers. In 1084 Henry was revenged for this humiliation when he captured the city of Rome, deposed Gregory and placed Clement III in the papal seat.

Henry V, 1106-1125, son of Henry IV, succeeded his father, not only as emperor but he also inherited his father's controversy with the papal authority. He solved this problem by kidnapping pope Paschal II and refused to release him until the pope agreed to Henry's terms. On his death in 1125 he left all his possessions to Frederick II of Hohenstaufen, his nephew, who became the next Holy Roman Emperor.

During the approximate 100 year rule of these Henry's, coins were struck in various cities of the empire, including Milan which produced small silver coins called "denaro scodellato". The design of this small coin remained unchanged from the 11th - 12th Century and are virtually indistinguishable. We have obtained a small hoard of these interesting coins which have on the obverse the legend HENRIC EMPERATOR and on the reverse MEDIOLANUM.

Australian Christmas Seals

These 27 seals are quite different from those issued by the US. For one thing they are of a more topical nature - painting such things as kangaroos, ostriches, boomerangs, etc. For another they couldn't be mistaken for the seals of any other country because they are very nationalistic. We feel sure you will enjoy adding these to your collection.

Japanese FDC's

By themselves, these Japanese FDC's would hardly be worth mentioning. But these aren't ordinary FDC's. These are the first in the series to bear the all silk "Colorono" cachets. These are very limited editions and have already been sold out by Colorono. The first US Colorono covers, issued a few years ago already bear a $25.00 buy price. We feel sure that you will enjoy owning these covers. They're quite beautiful too! Order No. 12-011

SPECIAL $5.95

CANADIAN SILVER COINAGE

One of our buyers recently traveled to Canada and purchased an extensive holding of rare material. We are pleased to announce that this collector agreed to allow us to sell these coins providing the public had a reasonable oppotunity to acquire many of the more difficult pieces in strictly BU grade. We offer in this section those coins which are taken from original mint wrapped rolls and are not to be confused with the so-called put together rolls which are usually seen in the numismatic marketplace. We have limited numbers of all coins available and suggest a phone call to reserve your selection, as our pricing is based on current wholesale bid levels. As you can see, we mean business. Check these prices with those listed and you will agree that we expect these coins to move quickly! We believe that the prices are under market value for gem material and that you will agree that Canadian coins represent one of the outstanding potential ground gainers for 1979.

1880-P GEM BU SILVER DOLLARS

We recently purchased two full bags of these sparkling beauties and picked out the best 100 coins from both bags. Well we call these MS-65++ and each coin is fully struck and a gem with minimal bag marks. We know you will appreciate these coins and recommend you place your order immediately. This coin is undervalued and so seldom seen, that recent wholesale values have climbed. Choice pieces such as ours should be going in the neighborhood of $50.00. Order now at just $42.50.
